In the letter of the New York Times which appeared on page 16 of the Paper on the 21st of March last, under the subhead of "Revolutionists in the East," appeared the following paragraph:

"Revolutionists in the East."—The Times says: "The Emperor of Turkey has issued an order, dated this day, for the arrest of the Armenian revolutionists, who have been giving a great deal of trouble in the East. It is understood that these revolutionists are not only engaged in destructive activities, but also in plot against the government of the Ottoman Empire.

The arrested revolutionists are to be brought to trial in Constantinople, and the government has promised to give them a fair trial.

The order for their arrest has been issued under the direction of the foreign ministry, and is intended to prevent further violence and disorder in the East. The government hopes that this action will put an end to the armed struggle between the revolutionists and the government forces.

The revolutionists have been active in the East for several years, and have caused much trouble to the government. They are said to have begun their activities in protest against the treatment of the Armenian minorities in the Ottoman Empire.

The government has been trying to put down the revolutionists for some time, but has been unable to prevent their activities. The arrest of these revolutionists is expected to bring an end to the struggle.

The government has also promised to give the revolutionists a fair trial, and to give them a chance to defend themselves. The government hopes that this action will help to bring about a peaceful solution to the Armenian question.
